Things to Come

2000

The Beginning of Things to Come:

We students at Charlestown High have seen a great many technological changes in the past several years. When we consider the question, "What does the future promise?" and we reflect on things to come, we can't help thinking about the technological advances that have been developed during our short lifetimes. The explosion of the Internet, the development of the DVD player, wireless telephone, digital photography etc. are all useful and important technological changes we students have witnessed just recently.

With these developments or changes in mind, we asked a few seniors this question: Considering the changes we have witnessed, what do you see in the future?

Janniver Castro replied, "I think technology will be the beginning of the end." Others like Sandy Rosa said that she "couldn't think that far ahead."

The main thing is, if we can grasp changes like e-mail and smaller but more powerful computers so quickly, we can just as easily grasp whatever changes evolve from the ones we have just seen. A few seniors had some predictions of their own. Gwendolyn Miller said that we will probably have "a remote control to operate every appliance in our home." Iuri Andrade agreed with the theme of the Jetsons and said, "Robots will become a new race." These students' predictions were supported by two others, Kim Duyen Ngo and Miguel Alarcon, who believed that some day "everything will be operated by some machine."

As of this writing, scientists have already created bio-molecules which act as on/off switches–a development which will lead to computers that will create themselves.

VOLLEYBALL

Throughout the years, our volleyball team has always been a contender. They have consistently worked hard to keep their winning streak alive. For the past two years they have had more wins than losses, and this year was the same. In fact, the team actually won two games against their past rival Latin Academy. They can honestly say that it's been a great year.

For the handful of seniors that have dedicated their time and hardwork to the team, CHS wishes them all the best in the future.

Sometime during the academic year Charlestown High School underwent an In-Depth Review, a process required of all BPS schools every four years.Our school did well. We received a rating of "Demonstrating Effectiveness," the highest possible rating. I am especially proud of one fact. The In-Depth Review Visiting Team gave us the highest ratings in "Instruction," "Structure to Support Learning," and "Professional Development Plan." The Team states: "We were impressed by the quality of instruction observed and the efforts to use imaginative and stimulating teaching techniques to accomplish results." In short, even though we are far from perfect, our teachers work hard to ensure our students learn well. The Team elaborates: "In each room we visited, ...directions were clear, instruction was focused, a variety in strategies was employed. Students were clearly well prepared to work effectively in groups and independently—all evidence of sustained and effective teaching."

St. Pat's

On March 15, 2000, the Multicultural Club held their annual spring bake sale in the cafeteria. This year the club dedicated the sale to St. Patrick's Day, which was two days away. The sale was no doubt a huge success mainly because of the club's presentation.

Green vests, green hats, and treats that covered four cafeteria tables, attracted customers like bees to honey. The tables were filled with both modest and extravagant treats. From well baked flans, to good old Dunkin Donuts. From the very first lunch, students piled on top of one another to buy some of the goodies, or get a peek at what was being sold.

All in all, the club put on a good show. Because of their reasonable prices and a variety of baked goods, both students and teachers couldn't resist. For those of you who missed this delicious event, stay tuned for next year's sale.
